

This American Land Museum's design started with the observation that there are only two parks in the community surrounding 9th & Main in downtown Los Angeles. The self-sustained structure in the center holds the program of the museum, as the two flanking areas have transformed into functional green parks to be used by a variety of people; from the long staying family member, to the quick business audience.